The Fresh Start Space Clearing Process

The Fresh Start Space Clearing Process works with the intelligent consciousness of Nature in a calm and co-creative space to create a clear and welcoming energy in a home or business.

Devic intelligence is one of the names for the intelligence that governs nature's role in transforming and managing ideas, energy into structure and form. The Devic intelligence that oversees your home or business is like the hard drive on your computer. It holds the memory of everything that has occurred in the home or on the property, possibly going back hundreds of years.

That hard drive can become cluttered with conflicting programs. That contributes to how your property, business or home feels. Nature cannot release these programs. Its job is to hold and store them. Releasing the programs, or clearing the hard drive, needs human assistance.

The Fresh Start Space Clearing Process clears the hard drive and restores the original blueprint or program for your land, home or business.

This clearing is done in what Sharon calls 'sacred space', a calm, clear and protected space in which listening for these conflicting programs becomes easier and clearer.

The Fresh Start Clearing Process consists of 12 steps that include creating the space, connecting with the devic intelligence, working with clearing energy or programs in 7 areas, integrating the areas of the property or business after clearing the 7 areas, energizing nature's blueprint for your home or business and a final grounding.

The process takes about 1 and a half to 2 hours. The timing can vary as each step is explained if the home or business owner is present for the clearing.

Nature’s view of a garden

Nature views everything that humans create as a garden. This could be a vegetable garden, a craft project, writing a book, building a home, operating a business…

Your home or your business has a consciousness that holds the wisdom of how to align in the best way with Nature to create balance and success in any environment.

Nature defines a garden as > “any environment that is

> • initiated by humans
> • given its purpose and direction by humans and
> • maintained with the help of humans
>
> For nature to consider something to be a garden, we must see humans actively involved in all three of these areas. It is the human who calls for a garden to exist. Once the call is made, nature responds accordingly to support that defined call because a garden exists through the use of form.
>
> Humans tend to look at gardens as an expression of nature. Nature looks at gardens as an expression of humans. They are initiated, defined and maintained by humans. When humans dominate all aspects and elements of the life of the garden, we consider this environment to be human dominant. We consider an environment to be “nature friendly” when humans understand that the elements used to create gardens are form, and operate best under the laws of nature and when humans have the best intentions of trying to cooperate with what they understand these laws to be. When humans understand that nature is a full partner in the design and operation of that environment — and act on this knowledge — we consider the environment to be actively moving toward a balance between involution and evolution.”
>
> Perelandra · A Garden as Defined by Nature

A practical example of Nature’s perspective might be that Nature would see your ideas and inspiration as seeds. Feeding and watering might be Nature’s way of describing using systems and finances for your business as ways to feed the products or ‘plants’.